

Photosynthesis – the process by which plants make food, using carbon dioxide from the air and water from the ground as ingredients (reactants), and sunlight as the energy source, to make sugar and oxygen as products. Almost all life on Earth depends on the process of photosynthesis to create food, by converting radiant energy into chemical energy. The chemical equation for photosynthesis is:

